Local Area Information

Pentraeth means 'head of the beach', so naturally it is situated at the head of a beach in this case the beautiful Red Wharf Bay, on the east coast of Anglesey, North Wales. Although the sea may have receded slightly over time, Pentraeth has enough attractions to tempt visitors into the small village.

As with all of the island of Anglesey there are an abundance of prehistoric sites, standing stones, and Neolithic burial chambers close to the village.

If the history of Pentraeth and the area doesn't tempt you towards it, then surely the walks will. The Afon Nodwydd runs straight through Pentraeth, offering some beautiful walks along its banks, and towards Red Wharf Bay, you can stroll around whilst appreciating the magnificent views across the bay and towards the Isle of Man.

Red Wharf Bay is also the place to go if you are a keen birdwatcher, as many sea birds flock here all times of year to make it their feeding ground.
